The report " Why the world needs happy schools: global report on happiness in and for learning" is now available in English and French

INFORMATION SHARING

- The UNESCO report "Why the world needs happy schools: global report on happiness in and for learning" is now available in English and French. The French version of the report was officially launched on the occasion of the French ASPnet Annual Meeting at UNESCO Headquarters on 12 and 13 December 2024, organized by the French National Commission for UNESCO.
- The English version was launched on the International Day of Happiness in March 2024. It urges education authorities to recognize happiness as a means – and an end – to quality education. The report draws on evidence from neuroscience, cognitive psychology and comparative education, which shows that joyful school environments, which foster engaging pedagogies and relationships, can improve teaching and learning experiences, as well as learning outcomes.
